The Nature of Desire. | elephant journal The nature of desire is that it keeps us bound. Desire conjures up a solution to all the problems we think we have and makes false promises of bringing us happiness, contentment, excitement, and wholeness°when we get there. Think of the last time you got what you thought you wanted. Maybe it was a new relationship.

The Nature of Desire by Paul J. Griffiths | Articles ... That desire is just one configuration possible for us; it is no more natural to us than its opposite, which is a desire for the lack that is God°s absence. The cultivation of the desire for God, then, is not a human work independent of God; it is an instance of responsive gratitude to the gift of the very possibility of action.
